Science Fiction Serial

The Time Lords of Doctor Who's own planet are usually omnipotent, but now they find themselves faced by a problem which even they cannot solve. They are under attack from a mysterious "black hole" in space which is draining away their energies. They learn that a streak of "space lightning" emanating from the black hole is headed directly for Earth. Doctor Who, in the meantime, has been approached by Doctor Tyler whose cosmic ray research balloon has picked up the track of the space lightning.

Another of Tyler's research balloons comes back from space bringing a blob of mysterious animated gell. This promptly devours Ollis, a countryman who discovers the landed balloon. The box containing the gell is taken to UNIT headquarters where it devours Tyler himself, rampages through the building, and eventually besieges the Doctor and Jo Grant inside the Tardis. The Doctor sends an S.O.S. to the Time Lords.

The Time Lords cannot help directly; all their powers are taken up in countering the drain on their energies. So as an emergency measure they transfer the Doctor's previous selves from his earlier time streams. To his astonishment, Doctor Who (played by Jon Pertwee) is confronted by himself in his previous incarnation (played by Patrick Troughton) and finally by a third self in his first (William Hartnell) incarnation.

Eventually the three learn that the gell, space lightning and the mysterious draining of the Time Lords' energies are all the work of one being. Omega, once himself a Time Lord, was trapped in a universe of anti-matter during the experiment that gave the Time Lords the power of time travel. Exiled for thousands of years, surviving only by an immense effort of will, he has become bitter and revengeful.

Continued.....

All three Doctors and their friends eventually fall victim to the gell which transports them through the black hole into Omega's world of anti-matter, a strange fantastic place which is the creation of the former Time Lord's will. They encounter Omega himself who demands that they help him to escape, an action that will inevitably leave them trapped in the anti-matter universe. Failing this, he will use all his powers to drain the cosmic energy from their universe into his, thus destroying the universe that he can never re-enter.

The three Doctors combine their forces, and more in sorrow than in anger bring about the destruction of Omega, so releasing him from an existence that has become a torment. Together with his other victims, the Doctors return to the normal world.

Here the Doctor's earlier incarnations disappear, leaving Doctor No. One (Jon Pertwee) with an irate Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart who is demanding a full explanation for the benefit of the United Nations Security Council.

Written by Bob Baker and Dave Martin.

Directed by Lennie Mayne.

Produced by Barry Letts.

EPISODE SYNOPSSES

Episode One (Recording No. 82370)

When a meteorological balloon with a box attached to it lands in a birdsanctuary the warden, Arthur Ollis, in accordance with the label tied to it, informs Doctor Tyler of Wessex University who is soon on his way. The box is crackling, and just before Tyler arrives there is a flash and Ollis vanishes.

Puzzled by the man's disappearance, Tyler gets in touch with Unit, and soon is explaining the situation to Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart and Doctor Who. He says that he uses the balloons for cosmic ray research, and in any case was going to get in touch with Unit as he had been getting some peculiar results. Space lightning seems to have been travelling faster than light. The Doctor has an explanation, but asks Tyler first to develop the photographs from the latest experiment. The first picture he sees is one of Arthur Ollis, screaming. He opens the box, and a grey gell begins to ooze out. There is another flash and Tyler vanishes.

In the area where the balloon landed Doctor Who questions Mrs. Ollis and then examines the actual spot. Worried, he returns to Unit. As he drives up to headquarters the gell is moving through a drain, and begins to emerge near the car. At first it moves towards Jo Grant, and then turns to the Doctor. He and Jo escape, but the car and the doors of the garage vanish.

In the meantime a fruitless search has been mounted for Tyler. The Doctor suggests that a guard be put on the drains, and then sees the photograph of Ollis. Reports show that the light beam seems to have scanned the face of the earth and then picked on Unit Headquarters. It is obvious that some powerful organism is hunting for the Doctor.

As the soldiers search four Gell Guards - shapeless, non-human creatures - appear. Bullets delay, but do not stop them. The Brigadier orders Sergeant Benton to evacuate the building. Benton comes into the laboratory, and then a six foot mound of gell appears. The Doctor orders the sergeant and Jo into the Tardis. A force field fails to repel the monster. Doctor Who sends an S.O.S.

The S.O.S. is to the Time Lords.

The Time Lords have identified the attack as coming from a hole in space where, according to all the known laws, nothing can exist. Cosmic energy is draining away, in spite of all they can do to check it, and already the time travel facility is endangered. Without it, they will be helpless. They are being consumed, and have no way to fight back against an adversary with a force equal to their own. As they can spare no one to help the Doctor, the President decides to break the rules.

The second incarnation of Doctor Who arrives in the Tardis, and is recognised by Benton, who remembers him from a past adventure. The two Doctors get to work on the problem.

The Brigadier and his soldiers enter the laboratory to find the Tardis entirely surrounded by a mass of gell. He decides they must pull back.

The two Doctors are bickering, watched by the Time Lords, who decide to summon up the original Doctor to keep the peace.

(From now on the Doctors will be referred to as:

First Doctor	(Jon Pertwee)
Second Doctor	(Patrick Troughton)
Third Doctor	(William Hartnell)

The Third Doctor tells the others that the gell is a time bridge. He suggests that they cross it. The First Doctor steps into the gell, followed by Jo; they vanish.

Episode Two (Recording No. 82371)

The Second Doctor and Benton leave the Tardis - the gell is now inert. The Brigadier comes in, and the Second Doctor explains what has happened.

Meanwhile, the First Doctor and Jo re-materialise on a beach.

The Time Lords report that the two have passed over the Absolute Event Horizon - theoretically they are dead. However, they come to, and move over the dunes, watched by a Gell Guard. They discover that various pieces of furniture and so on vapourised by the gell are there, including the Doctor's car. They drive off.

The Second Doctor decides to keep the gell occupied, and rigs up a device for this purpose, but the Brigadier calls him away to make a report, and he has to leave the control to Benton. By the time the others return the mass is bubbling again, and they have to take refuge in the Tardis.

Continued.....

Before long the First Doctor and Jo meet Doctor Tyler, and they debate the problem of why they have arrived in this place. Then they are rounded up by half a dozen Gell Guards.

The Second Doctor manages to rig up a radio telephone for the Brigadier to talk to his subordinates outside. Corporal Palmer reports that the building is still surrounded. The Third Doctor has been trapped in a time eddy and can only appear on a screen. He reports that the Time Lords are getting weaker. The Second Doctor cannot see any way of helping, but his "colleague" makes a suggestion. He is to turn off the force field surrounding the Tardis.

The First Doctor is brought into the palace of Omega.

The whole Unit building vanishes.

Episode Three (Recording No. 82569)

The First Doctor, Jo and Tyler are brought into Omega's throne room. The girl and Tyler are removed and placed in a cell.

Omega was once a Time Lord until he found and created the power source that gave the Time Lords mastery over time itself. He was blown out of existence into the black hole of anti-matter. The Doctor, who has known him as the Time Lords greatest hero all his life, says he is revered in their history as a hero. Omega thinks that he should have been a god. Now he needs the help of a fellow Time Lord in order to destroy the others.

The Second Doctor, the Brigadier and Benton, as well as the Tardis and the Unit building, arrive in Omega's world. The Brigadier, convinced that they are in eastern England, goes out to telephone authority and meets Ollis who tells them that the First Doctor was taken away by Gell Guards. Just then they see more Gell Guards removing the Second Doctor and Benton. They are taken to Omega who at once recognises the two Doctors as different manifestations of the same personality.

Continued.....

Removed to the same prison as Jo and Tyler, the two Doctors begin to quarrel again, but then apologise. They begin to discuss how they can overcome Omega in a world where the only natural law is the former Time Lord's will. Soon they have escaped from the cell and are back in Omega's chamber. They tell him he has two possible courses of action: free them and they will plead his cause to the Time Lords. Otherwise they will combine their wills to destroy him.

In the meantime Jo, Benton and Tyler escape from the building and join forces with the Brigadier and Ollis.

The Doctor is struggling without success against Omega's champion, an alien giant.

Episode Four (Recording No. 82579)

Forced to help Omega, the Doctors discover that behind his mask there is nothing; he exists only by the force of his will. They make their escape and run towards the Unit headquarters, pursued by Gell Guards, but manage to get into the Tardis with the others.

In the meantime, using what remains of their energy, the Time Lords send the Third Doctor to the rescue. He materialises on the screen in the Tardis. The three Doctors go into a telepathic conference, and announce that they have found a possible, although risky, solution.

Doctors One and Two contact Omega and tell him that they have found a way to give him his freedom. The people from Earth are sent home, while the two Time Lords give their word not to attempt to leave Omega's world before he does. With the aid of a device they have rigged up Omega becomes a supernova.

Back on earth, the Brigadier and the others soon are able to welcome back the two Doctors. The Second Doctor returns to his own time sphere, and the Time Lords send the First Doctor a dematerialisation circuit, thus giving him back his freedom of movement.

In this story, the first since Doctor Who was given back his freedom of movement, he and Jo become prisoners inside a futuristic peepshow, along with a number of other specimens, some of them extremely hostile. These are the Drashigs, a kind of dragon that is the most savage and destructive life form in the cosmos.

There are exciting action sequences in a futuristic city on an alien planet, on board a cargo ship at sea, and in steaming pre-historic marshes.

Two visitors arrive on an alien planet, far distant in time and space. They are Vorg, a wandering showman, and his girl assistant Shirna. They bring with them the Scope, a kind of super-technological peepshow which maintains, miniaturised, different life forms from all over the galaxy, kept in a simulation of their natural environments. The entertainers are met by a tribunal consisting of Kalik, Orum and Pletrac, members of the planet's ruling class of Officials.

In the meantime, the Doctor and Jo come out of the Tardis to find themselves apparently on board a cargo steamer chugging through the Indian Ocean in the year 1926. They soon discover that their fellow passengers are trapped in a loop of time, repeating the same actions over and over again. When a giant hand appears from the skies and whisks away the Tardis, it is clear that the Doctor and Jo have become miniaturised specimens inside Vorg's Scope.

The Doctor and Jo try to escape, and break through into another sector. There they find themselves pursued by the terrifying Drashigs, the most savage and monstrous life form in the Universe. They are separated, and the Doctor escapes from the Scope on his own, materialising to full size before the astonished Vorg and Shirna.

Continued.....

The Doctor begins a struggle against Time to free Jo from the Scope, and to return the other specimens to their rightful places. He also becomes involved in the revolutionary intrigues of Kalik and Orum, who are plotting to overthrow their superiors.

By linking the Tardis to the Scope, the Doctor manages to release Jo and return the other captive life forms to their own worlds and times. Vorg deals with the Drashigs who, thanks to the interference of Kalik and Orum, escape and materialise to their full size to rampage through the alien city.

The Doctor and Jo re-enter the Tardis and go on their way. Vorg and Shirna remain to enjoy a prosperous show business career in the alien city.

Written by Robert Holmes.

Directed and produced by Barry Letts.

Episode One (Recording No. 79332)

On an alien planet in the far distant future the three members of a tribunal prepare to greet the first visitors from outside the planet for thousands of years. The cargo shuttle arrives and on it are The Great Vorg, his assistant Shirna and their Scope, a miniaturised peepshow. The tribunal are all Officials, the ruling cast. Vorg and Shirna are horrified to see their brutal treatment of one of the Functionaries (the working class) who runs amok.

In the meantime the Tardis materialises in the hold of a ship. The Doctor's destination was the Blue planet; Jo smells chickens, and suspects that they have lost their way.

The Chairman of the tribunal is Pletrac; the others are Kalik and Orum. President Zarb, worried about the inexplicable vagaries of the Functionaries, has decided to provide distractions for them, and decreed that the first alien visitors should be Lurmans - the inhabitants of the planet to which Vorg and Shirna belong. The Lurmans are worried by the fact that there seems to be a systems defect in the Scope, as they want to start the entertainment at once.

The Doctor and Jo leave the hold and find themselves on board a cargo ship. There are two passengers, Major Daly and his daughter Claire. It is soon clear that they belong to the nineteen twenties, and are on their way to Bombay. The Doctor is worried; his instinct tells him that there is something wrong. The noise of a plesiosaurus outside strengthens his conviction - the creature has been extinct for some hundred and thirty million years. Then the First Officer, Andrews, arrests the Doctor and Jo as stowaways.

Kalik is opposed to the changes President Zarb is making; he feels there is no point in trying to appease the Functionaries, and disapproves very strongly of the importation of aliens.

The Doctor sees an octagonal metal plate in the corridor of the ship. It is invisible to Andrews. Then he realises that they are on board the S.S. "Bernice" which vanished in the middle of the Indian Ocean in 1926. He also realises that the people on board are trapped in a time loop.

The Doctor and Jo manage to escape and get back to the hold. While they are there the roof is taken off and a giant hand takes out the Tardis.

Episode Two (recording No. 79344)

The tribunal ask Vorg the function of his machine. Amusement is prohibited on their planet, although Zarb is considering lifting the restriction. Kalik sees the prospect of revolution. He opposes Vorg's application for a visa and Orum supports him. Pletrac disagrees, but is out-voted. Vorg explains how the machine works, and shows them the collection of miniaturised creatures inside it. However, his prize exhibit, the Drashigs, decline to appear.

He refers to the human beings from Earth as Tellurians, and by adjusting an agglomerometer he provokes a quarrel amongst them. Shirna remarks that two of the Tellurians are new to her. The Doctor and Andrews fight, according to Queensberry rules; the former wins. Vorg reduces the tension. The Doctor and Jo escape again, and make their way down a shaft. They find themselves in the machinery of the Scope.

Kalik points out that Vorg has imported creatures without a licence. The tribunal decrees that they must be destroyed, and sends for an eradicator unit. But the eradicator has no effect on the Scope, apart from some unpleasantness for its occupants. Kalik says they have just demonstrated how inefficient their defences are to Lurman spies. Convinced that the Scope is some means of communication he and Orum look inside, and pull out a matchbox-sized object. It is the Tardis, and at once it expands to its normal dimensions.

Jo and the Doctor come out into a cave. Another fault develops in the Scope and a warning light flashes. The cave entrance leads to a steaming swamp, and the escapers at once feel uneasy. Then they see the Drashigs.

Episode Three (Recording No. 79608)

While Vorg and the members of the tribunal watch, the Doctor and Jo flee from the Drashigs. Kalik is developing an idea, and he persuades Vorg to help the fugitives; with his aid they get back into the shaft. The Doctor realises that they are in a miniscope, a device that was banned by the High Council of the Time Lords as being an affront against the dignity of sentient life forms.

Outside, Shirna sees that the Drashigs are following their prey. She is worried that they may get out of their own sector, or even escape from the Scope altogether. (Anything getting out at once returns to normal size).

Continued.....

The tribunal agrees that Pletrac should seek special authority from President Zarb to deal with the situation. In the meantime the eradicator squad remains on the alert. There are no Drashigs left in their own circuit. Vorg has to admit to Kalik that they may be in the supply lines.

Kalik tells Orum that he wants the Drashigs to escape from the Scope to cause a war from which a new leader will emerge - himself. He sends the eradicator squad away.

The Doctor and Jo get through to the ship's hold, and once again Jo is arrested and led away. Then the Drashigs break through. Major Daly and the ship's crew manage to repel them. Andrews uses dynamite against the others, and the circuits of the Scope begin to fail.

The Doctor manages to get out of the Scope.

Episode Four (Recording No. 79612)

The Doctor at once expands to full size, and is delighted to see the Tardis. He takes charge of the situation and accuses the others of breaking the law of the cosmos by allowing the operation of the Scope. Pletrac wants the eradicator used against this possibly germ-ridden alien but is out-voted. Vorg tells Doctor Who that the machine's systems are breaking down, which will mean the death of all inside. While they are talking Kalik hides a piece taken out of the eradicator - the trizon - in Vorg's baggage.

The outer hull of the Scope is vibrating, and Shirna realises that the Drashigs are trying to break out. Using the Tardis's electric systems the Doctor manages to get back into the Scope, and soon finds Jo. All those on the ship are beginning to feel the effect of the breakdown of the life support systems.

Kalik loosens the plates at the base of the Scope, the Drashigs break out, and become life-size. He is their first victim. Vorg finds the trizon, feeds it back into the eradicator and destroys the creatures. Then he pulls the Phase Two switch rigged up by the Doctor. All those within vanish from the Scope back to their own places and times, except for the Doctor and Jo, who materialise just outside.

Vorg and Shirna are the hero and heroine of the hour, and the former realises that there are possibilities of making a good living from the Lurman equivalent of "Find the Lady".

The Doctor and Jo enter the Tardis and disappear.

Drama Serial
6 - 25' episodes

This latest Doctor Who adventure is set in the twenty-fifth century, in a world of inter-galactic space travel, and many of the exciting sequences involve ships in deep space.

There is a new race of alien beings, the Draconians. Known to the men of Earth as "Dragons", they are fierce warriors and rivals of mankind in building an empire.

The race of savage giants called the Ogrons return; they were last seen in "Day of the Daleks" as servants of the Doctor's bitterest enemies.

Last, but by no means least, in the last episode the Daleks appear as a prelude to the following serial, "Planet of the Daleks".

Doctor Who and Jo Grant, returning to Earth in the Tardis, are involved in an accident, and to avoid a collision with another ship, the Doctor is forced to materialise the Tardis in the other vessel's hold.

They emerge, and find themselves caught up in a series of mysterious and terrifying events. The Earth ship is attacked, and the Doctor and Jo recognise their old enemies, the Ogrons. But to the ship's crew the invaders look like Draconians, and they see the two space travellers as Draconian soldiers.

During the attack on the ship the Tardis is stolen by the Ogrons. Rescued by an Earth battle cruiser, the Doctor and Jo are taken back to Earth where they are accused of being Draconian spies and saboteurs. The Doctor is then kidnapped by the Draconians and taken to their Embassy where he is accused of being an agent-provocateur in the pay of Earth. He escapes, only to be recaptured by Earth soldiers.

Continued.....

Hunted and accused by both sides, the Doctor realises what is happening. Some third party, using the Ogrons as agents, is determined to provoke war between the two worlds. By the use of a hypnotic device, the unknown enemy is making each side think they are being attacked by the other; in each case it is the Ogrons who are the attacker.

But who is manipulating the Ogrons in his bid to cause war? During the course of exciting adventures on a twenty-fifth century Earth, in deep space, in a prison on the moon, and finally on the bleak and terrifying planet of the Ogrons, the Doctor discovers the truth. His old enemy the Master is directing the Ogrons, but behind him is an even more terrifying foe - the Daleks.

In a confrontation in the Ogrons' desolate land, the Doctor defeats the Master's plans and so prevents a space war. But as usual the Master makes his escape, and so do the Daleks. Somewhere a mighty army of them is waiting, still determined to invade our galaxy. The Doctor and Jo set off in pursuit

Jon Pertwee plays Doctor Who and Roger Delgado appears as the Master. Jo is played by Katy Manning.

EPISODE ONE (Recording No. 81462)

An Earth space ship, travelling through space in the twenty-fifth century, is preparing to land with its cargo while its two crewmen discuss the recent attacks by Draconians. Then they see an object spinning towards them, which vanishes before collision.

The object is the Tardis which, to avoid collision, the Doctor has materialised in the hold of a cargo vessel. Then a space ship appears on the cargo vessel's control screen and suddenly there is a high pitched sound. The ship, to the eyes of the Earthmen, changes into a fully armed Draconian battle cruiser. They send a S.O.S. to Earth. The Doctor and Jo make their way to the main part of the ship and meet one of the crewmen. The sound begins again; the crewman sees the Doctor as a Draconian while Jo, in her turn, sees the Earthman as a Drashig. The enemy space ship locks on, and her captain demands admittance.

In her office the Earth President is receiving the Draconian Ambassador, who is the son of the Emperor. With her is General Williams. The Draconian is making a complain about attacks by Earth ships; in her turn the President makes a counter-charge. Then the message comes through from the cargo ship.

Jo and the Doctor are locked in the hold, and the Doctor identifies the period in which they have landed as one when both Earth and Draconia were colonising planet after planet with inevitable conflict. He realises that the noise they heard had the effect of making a person see the thing they feared most.

A rescue ship is sent from earth, while the invaders burn their way through the cargo ship's airlock door with thermal lances. The crewmen bring their prisoners out to use them as hostages. The door gives way and the invaders come through. The Earthmen see Draconians, but to the Doctor and Jo they appear in their right shape - Ogrons. They stun the crewmen and the Doctor; then make their escape with the cargo and the Tardis.

The rescue ship arrives, and the Doctor and Jo are accused of being traitors.

EPISODE TWO (Recording No.81504)

The ships return to Earth, and the crewmen make their report. The Doctor and Jo are taken before the World President who has with her General Williams and the Draconian Ambassador. Accused of being an agent of the Draconians, the Doctor denies it, and is of course repudiated by the Ambassador. But his story is not believed by the Earth people, and they are taken to a prison cell. The Doctor realises that Earth and Draconia are on the brink of war.

At the Draconian Embassy, the prince says he must have more information. Obviously it would be a hostile act to kidnap the Doctor, but to give sanctuary to an escaping prisoner would be another matter.

By a ruse the Doctor is "rescued" and taken to the Embassy.

Continued.....

General Williams demands that the President should break off diplomatic relations with Draconia at once, but she refuses to do this.

Jo is questioned by the President and Williams, but sticks to her story. The Draconians have no more success with the Doctor, who manages to make his escape, only to be recaptured by Earth Guards and taken back to the prison cell.

The Ogrons invade the prison and force their way into the Doctor's cell. Their leader says: "You come".

EPISODE THREE (Recording No. 81725)

Before they can make off with their prisoners, the Ogrons are forced by Earth soldiers to make their retreat.

Williams thinks the situation demands war, and warns the President that there are those who, if she is not seen to act decisively against the Draconians, will demand her replacement. Certain senior officers feel that a military dictatorship is needed. She must act, or they will bring her down. She agrees to break off diplomatic relations, but refuses to strike the first blow in a war.

A mind probe is used to question the Doctor, but the only result is that the machine breaks down. The President refuses to allow it to be used on Jo. The Doctor muses that it is a pity that the Ogrons did not succeed in the kidnapping attempt; after all they have the Tardis. He is taken to the President, but she refuses to believe his story and sentences him to the Lunar Penal Colony. Jo will remain on Earth where, away from his influence, she may be made to see the error of her ways.

The Doctor arrives at the Lunar prison which is reserved for political offenders. Here he meets two members of the Peace Party; Patel and Dale.

Meanwhile on Earth an emissary arrives from the Dominion Government of Sirius Four. He has evidence that the Doctor and Jo are wanted for various crimes committed in the former colony. Their custody is granted to the Commissioner - the Master.

Jo leaves with the Master without any fuss; after all, as she says, anywhere is better than where she is.

Doctor Who and Dale, with the connivance of a trusty convict - Cross - attempt to escape in a space ship and find themselves in a trap. The Doctor realises that this is an attempt to murder Dale, who is still regarded as a political danger.

EPISODE FOUR (Recording No.81733)

Before they suffocate, the Master comes to the rescue. The governor of the prison is reluctant to let the Doctor go, but when the Master accuses the man of being involved in the murder attempt, he changes his mind.

In the hold of the Master's space ship the Doctor and Jo are making their journey to an unknown destination. The Master himself puts the ship on an automatic course and then settles down to read "The War of the Worlds". He can see his prisoners on a television screen.

While Jo distracts the Master's attention, the Doctor manages to get out of the hold, find a space suit, and make his way to the outside of the ship. The Master has to make a course correction, and the jolt throws the Doctor off so that he is "swimming" in space. But he manages to get back.

The Master becomes suspicious, and discovers that one of his prisoners has disappeared. By threatening Jo, he forces the Doctor to return.

At that moment a Draconian space ship arrives, and a boarding party comes in. A state of emergency now exists between Earth and Draconia. The travellers have violated Draconian space and the penalty is death.

EPISODE FIVE (Recording No. 81918)

They are taken on board the Draconian ship where, unseen, the Master switches on a homing device which is seen in an Ogron vessel.

The prisoners are taken to the Draconian Emperor who is at first suspicious of the Doctor but then seems to become more friendly. The Ogron ship lands and the crew arrives in the throne room

- the Draconians see them as Earth men. The Draconians force the invaders to withdraw - the Master goes with them - but the Doctor manages to knock one of them unconscious. As the effect of the hypnotic device wears off the Draconians see him for what he really is.

Using the Master's ship - an Earth vessel - the Doctor, Jo, with the Draconian Prince and a Draconian crew, begin a journey back to Earth. The captured Ogron is also on board. They are attacked by an Ogron ship, with the Master on board, but are managing to escape. Then the Ogron prisoner escapes; in the ensuing fight one of the ship's controls is knocked and the vessel slows down. The Ogrons come on board. Jo is taken away at once. The Doctor and the Draconian Prince defend themselves, and then an Earth battle cruiser approaches. The Ogrons have to leave without the Doctor.

The Doctor and the Draconian reach Earth and are taken to the President. General Williams refuses to believe them at first, but when he hears the true story of how the earlier war between Earth and Draconia started, he comes round. He not only authorises an expedition to the Ogron planet; he decides to lead it in his own ship.

In the meantime Jo arrives at the Ogron planet where she sees the Tardis. The Master says that he intends to set a trap for the Doctor and she is going to help him.

EPISODE SIX (Recording No.81919)

The expedition leaves; the Doctor knows the exact location of the Ogron planet. They are attacked by a Draconian ship, but the ultra-modern vessel manages to outrun it. After this there is some malfunction of the ship, but the Doctor manages to put it right.

Jo manages to escape from her cell and finds herself in a place with a drawing of a giant lizard to which the Ogrons apparently make propitiatory offerings. Then she manages to make her way to the Master's communication equipment and sends out an S.O.S. This is just what the Master wanted her to do. It is in fact a short-range transmitter which can be heard only by a ship in orbit of the planet.

The Master gives the Ogrons instructions to ambush the ship as it lands, but as the attack begins the real life version of the drawing appears - an Ogron Eater - and they run away.

The Master, furious, tells the Ogrons that their masters are on their way. The Doctor has a kind of premonition. Very soon he and the rest of the party are captured - by Daleks. The master manages to persuade the Daleks to let the Doctor remain with him until the war is over so that he can suffer by seeing what it does to Earth. Then he will be sent to the Dalek planet to be exterminated. The prisoners are put in cells with an Ogron guard.

By using the Master's hypnotic device the Doctor appears to the guard as a Dalek. He unlocks the gate and then runs away.

General Williams, the Draconian Prince and the crew return to Earth. The Doctor and Jo take off in the Tardis. They are going after the Daleks.

PLANET OF THE DALEKS

Science fiction serial
6-25! episodes
Colour videotape
16mm monochrome

The Doctor discovers a huge army of Daleks in this serial written by Terry Nation, who created the most successful of all Doctor Who monsters ten years ago.

After escaping from the Master and his Ogrons, the Doctor sets off in pursuit of the Daleks who were backing the renegade Time Lord in his plans to cause interplanetary war.

Once inside his ship, Doctor Who shows signs of illness, and he contacts the Time Lords telepathically. Then he sinks into a death-like coma, and the Tardis lands on the planet of Spiridon. Jo leaves the ship to get help, and at once is surrounded by the dangers of the weird jungle. Then she meets a party of Thals, the other inhabitants of Skaro, who were the Doctor's allies in his first encounter with the Daleks. They are on a suicide mission in an attempt to stop the monsters' latest attempt at world domination.

The Doctor, now recovered, is rescued from the sponge-like growth which was choking the Tardis, and the two parties join forces.

They are hunted by Dalek patrols, they meet the Spiridons who have been enslaved and forced to yield their secret of invisibility, and they discover geyser-like pools of molten ice. After many narrow escapes they are at last able to use the power of the ice volcano to destroy their enemy. Jo develops a fondness for one of the Thals, but decides to return to her own planet. The Thals make their way back to Skaro in a Dalek ship, and the only surviving monsters - the Dalek Supreme and his two aides - try to prevent the Doctor from returning to Earth.

John Pertwee plays Doctor Who.

Director: David Maloney

Producer: Barry Letts

EPISODE SYNOPSES

Episode One (Recording No. 83751)

As the Tardis leaves the Ogron planet, Doctor Who sends a telepathic message to the Time Lords and then collapses. The ship lands, apparently by remote control.

Jo, unable to rouse the Doctor, leaves to explore and finds herself on a planet covered with thick jungle. Much of the area is overlaid with a sponge-like fungus which every so often expels a stream of spores. Jo's clothes are smeared with it, and it begins to form on the surface of the Tardis. She finds some footprints, and when she kneels to examine them, the spray hits her bare hand.

Doctor Who regains consciousness and is surprised to find that although the controls register that the atmosphere outside is breathable, inside the ship the automatic oxygen supply is on. This is soon exhausted, and he has to turn to the emergency store - now he has only an hour's breathable air left.

Jo finds an empty space ship. Soon two members of the crew, Taron and Vaber, return and agree to help her. A third, Codal, rushes in with a report of a nearby patrol. They decide to go out, leaving Jo hidden. An invisible creature enters and searches the vessel, moving various objects about as it does so.

The Doctor, now without air and unable to leave the Tardis, collapses. Taron and Vaber, wearing protective clothing, arrive just in time to clear away the sponges covering the outside of the ship and free him. The Doctor recognises them as Thals - the other inhabitants of the planet the Daleks come from, Skaro. He met their ancestors on an earlier adventure, when he had his first clash with the Daleks.

Back at the Thal ship, Jo discovers that her arm is covered with the fungus.

The Doctor learns that they are on the planet of Spiridon, whose inhabitants have perfected the science of making themselves invisible. Taron and his friends are there on a suicide mission.

Croaking noises are heard from something invisible; obviously in distress. Using a colour spray the Thals reveal its identity. It is a Dalek.

Episode Two (Recording No. 83760)

Codal, the Thal's scientist, tells the Doctor that the Daleks have enslaved the Spiridons and forced them to reveal their secret - how to use an anti-reflecting light wave to become invisible. As yet they can manage this only for a few minutes. The Doctor stops the Thals from lifting the headpiece of the de-activated Dalek; he knows from past experience that if this is done a distress call is emitted.

Leaving the Doctor and Vaber to rest, Tardon and Codal scout around. Vaber's view is that they should be putting all their energy into blowing up the Dalek laboratories. There are only about a dozen of the enemy on the planet.

Jo, much worse, becomes unconscious.

Codal leads a Spiridon patrol away from the others and is captured. His friends return, with the Doctor, to their space craft, only to find the Daleks there. To the Doctors horror they blow it up and trying to stop them he too is captured. Very soon he finds himself in a cell with Codal.

Jo in fact has already been rescued by a Spiridon (visible because of the animal skins he is wearing as a protection against the cold). His name is Wester, and he spreads an ointment on her arm.

Taron and Vaber recover some bombs they had hidden. There is the noise of a space craft crashing.

Jo, now cured, learns from Wester that the Doctor has been captured.

The space craft is a Thal vessel. There are only three survivors - a girl, Rebec, and two men, Marat and Latep. Rebec asks Taron how large he thinks the enemy force is - he replies, about a dozen. Then she tells him that somewhere on Spiridon there are twelve thousand Daleks.

Episode Three (Recording No. 83951)

Wester takes Jo to the entrance of the Dalek stronghold. Fur-clad Spiridons are visible, carrying in samples for Dalek experiments with plant-destroying bacteria.

The Doctor, in a prison cell with Codal, is working on a jamming device.

There is an ice volcano on Spiridon and many places where ice comes out of the ground. It is semi-liquid, like lava, and does not become solid. The natural air shafts so formed have been used by the Daleks to provide the cooling systems for their fortress. Taron leads his party to one of these as he thinks it might be possible to enter the building in this way.

Vaber hides all the bombs but one again, and the Thals begin their attempt.

Jo hides in one of the baskets the Spiridons are carrying in.

After immobilising a Dalek guard, the Doctor and Codal manage to escape from their cell.

Hidden in the Dalek control room, Jo hears a warning of an imminent ice eruption. The Thals in the tunnel have already run into this danger.

The Daleks discover that their prisoners have escaped and trap them in a lift. However they manage to get away and join up with the Thal party. Once again they are trapped, this time at level zero. Marat sacrifices himself so that his friends can get away, and they bar themselves in a room containing a nuclear powered refrigeration unit. Both the Doctor and Taron are puzzled as to why the Daleks should need this apparently superfluous equipment, but there is a more pressing matter to deal with - the need to get out. The Daleks are already cutting their way through the door.

From a piece of paper on Marat's body the Daleks discover where the bombs are hidden. They make their way to the surface to destroy them, followed by Jo.

Using hot air from the refrigeration unit, the Doctor rigs up a way of escape - they are to float up the chimney using a plastic piece of sheeting as a kind of inverted parachute.

Continued.....

Through a shutter the Doctor catches a glimpse of a frozen army of thousands of Daleks.

It seems as though the escape device is not going to function, and the Daleks are breaking through.

Episode Four (Recording No. 83952)

At last the device begins to work. The Doctor and the Thals begin to rise, unseen so far by the Daleks. Fortunately, when they are spotted they are out of reach of the enemy's weapons.

The Daleks procure an anti-gravitational disc and begin a slow pursuit. The plastic canopy is beginning to split, but the sides of the chimney now afford a foothold and the Thals manage to climb out. The Doctor is in difficulties, but Taron has a rope and rescues him. By dropping boulders they destroy their pursuer.

The Daleks activate the bombs, but as soon as they leave Jo begins to return the mechanisms to "Safe". Before she can deactivate the last one she is hit by falling rock and knocked unconscious. However, she comes to and takes cover before it explodes. It destroys a Dalek patrol looking for the escapers.

An order comes through from Dalek Supreme Command that a bacteriological culture is to be prepared that will destroy all living tissue. The escaped prisoners will be killed, but the Daleks and the Spiridon slave workers will be given immunity.

Jo meets the Doctor and the Thals, and she and Latep collect the bombs.

Then they make their way to the plain of stones, getting a glimpse on the way of a patrol of Daleks and Spiridons, the former moving with difficulty in the intense cold. Codal feels that the refrigeration unit must be the key to their plan to destroy the Daleks.

Back at headquarters the Daleks are preparing their culture. In half a day it will be ready.

Continued.....

While the others are asleep Vaber takes the bombs in order to make a lone suicide mission. He is captured by Spiridons and taken to the Daleks.

Episode Five (Recording No. 84122)

Taron and Codal see what has happened. They follow the Spiridons, overpower two of them and disguise themselves in their furs.

The Doctor says the worst thing they could do would be to destroy the refrigeration unit, as this would animate the frozen Dalek army. Wester comes to them to tell them about the bacteria bomb. The Doctor decides to wait until full light, and if Taron and Codal are not back they will begin their three-fold task - to stop the bacteria bomb, to make sure the army remains inactive, and to put a stop to the Dalek's chances of invading other planets. He has no idea how.

Vaber is killed by the Daleks, but Taron and Codal manage to escape with the bombs.

The Daleks begin the process of immunisation against the bacteria.

Taron and Codal rejoin their friends, and the Doctor starts to put his plan into operation. Latep and Jo are sent to lure a Dalek patrol in their direction, while the Doctor shows Taron a pool of molten ice, pointing out that the Daleks can scarcely move at sub-zero temperatures.

The two Daleks are forced into a pool where the shock of the cold kills them. Their bodies are thrown into the water, and the empty armour is brought ashore.

Wester, the Spiridon, manages to get into Dalek headquarters.

Rebec and Codal, each in a Dalek machine, and followed by the Doctor and Taron, disguised in Spiridon furs, are admitted to the control area of the Dalek fortress. From the control room they see Wester in the laboratory. He breaks the glass cases of the bacteria culture, and dies at once.

Then the Daleks spot the Doctor and Taron.

Episode Six (Recording No. 84130)

The Doctor and the Thals make their escape, and the Daleks launch an offensive to capture them. Rebec and Codal discard their Dalek armour. They are carrying a bomb. They make their way towards the arsenal where the frozen army is stored. Once inside the cooling chamber just above it, they build a barrier across the entrance.

News comes through to the control room that the Dalek Supreme is arriving to take command, and that the leading alien has been identified as their greatest enemy, the Doctor. As he has much knowledge that would be of value to them, he must be captured alive for interrogation.

In the jungle Jo and Latep see a space ship land, and out comes the gleaming black and gold Dalek Supreme. Jo suggests that this craft might provide a way of escape for the Thals.

In the meantime, the other four become aware that the refrigeration plant has been switched off.

The Dalek Supreme has announced that the army is to be activated. The invasion of all solar planets is to begin at once, and the space transporters are to assemble to await landing orders. The Daleks have now mastered the Spiridons' secret of invisibility.

Codal and the Doctor find a suitable fissure in the rock wall in which to place their bomb. They have only a short time before the army becomes fully active.

The Daleks have almost broken through when Jo and Latep arrive with the other bomb. Latep flings it and for the moment the advance is stopped. They join the others. Codal sets his bomb to detonate in thirty seconds, and the Doctor pushes it into the fissure. The plan is to break the rock walls, let in the molten ice, and thus re-freeze the army for centuries. The explosion takes place, apparently without any effect.

The Doctor decides that they must leave at once, and they begin their journey up a ramp leading to the surface. At that moment the ice volcano erupts, and the enemy are buried. The Supreme and his two aides, in the control room, are the only Daleks left alive.

Continued.....

The Doctor and his friends reach the Supreme's space ship, and the Thals begin preparations to leave. Latep asks Jo to come with him; she has become very fond of the Thal, but decides that she must return to her own life in her own world. The space ship takes off.

As the Doctor and Jo leave to find the Tardis they discover that they are being pursued by the surviving Daleks.

The Doctor's latest adventure takes him to Wales where he has to deal with a very topical subject - pollution. - and his arch-enemy is a machine.

United Chemicals have set up a research centre at Llanfairfach. The main project involved is the field trials of a new method of cracking crude oil. The complex also houses the company's giant computer which deals with its world wide operations. The trials are very successful and the British Government gives permission and money for the setting up of a full-scale refinery.

The coal mines of Llanfairfach have been closed, and the villagers are delighted at the prospect of work brought by United. But there is opposition. Professor Clifford Jones, at thirty a Nobel Prize Winner for his work on DNA synthesis, and notorious for his prophecies of ecological doom, has set up a community in the Llanfairfach valley. This is dedicated to demonstrating that the way of life essential for planetary survival is not only possible, but vastly superior in quality to the usual twentieth century grind. Wholeweal - locally known as the Nuthutch have campaigned for two years against United's despoliation and pollution. Now they are doubly incensed that their own small paradise is threatened.

There is a mysterious death in an abandoned coalmine, and bearing in mind United's international ramifications, the Brigadier decides to investigate. The Doctor, however, who now has the Tardis more or less in working order, with the permission of the Time Lords, has set his heart on a trip to Metebelis Three to gather a blue sapphire. Jo, who is very interested in the work of Wholeweal, declines to accompany him, and goes to Wales with the Brigadier.

Continued.....

The first person she meets is Clifford Jones, and at once they are strongly attracted to each other. Then there is another alarm in the mine when a miner on an inspection trip sends a call for help.

Jo, who is trained in first aid, goes down with another miner, and both in their turn are trapped.

In the meantime the Doctor has arrived in Wales after a hectic trip to Metebelis Three, bringing back with him a blue sapphire. He goes to the rescue and down in the mine finds deadly green slime and two foot maggots.

It is becoming clear that Stevens, the director of the complex, is fighting hard against anything that will interfere with United's operations.

The maggots come to the surface, and nothing can destroy them. Cliff Evans contacts the green sickness. The Doctor, in a race against time, has to find an antidote, and something that will kill the potential invaders. He achieves both his objectives, and in a final duel with the giant computer that has taken over Steven's mind he destroys an evil power bent on pollution and destruction.

Jon Pertwee plays Doctor Who with Katy Manning as Jo Grant and Nicholas Courtney as Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart.

EPISODE ONE (Recording No. 84962)

At Llanfairfach, near the coast of South Wales, the unemployed villagers are delighted to hear that the government has given Global Chemicals permission to set up a full-scale refinery. Already the company has been trying out a new method of cracking crude oil, and the complex houses the giant computer which deals with all the world wide operations of the combine.

However there is opposition. Clifford Jones, who has won the Nobel prize for his work on DNA synthesis, has set up a community to demonstrate that the way of life essential for planetary survival can be superior in quality to the usual twentieth century grind. For two years they have campaigned against the company's despolitation and pollution of the world environment; now they are furious that their own community is threatened.

There is a death in the pit into which waste is being pumped - the body is a glowing green, and Unit is brought in to investigate. Jo in any case was going to Llanfairfach - she is a wholehearted supporter of the aims of Jones's Wholeweal movement. The Doctor has other plans - he wants to obtain a sapphire from Metebelis Three. So the Brigadier, Sergeant Benton and Jo go to Wales while the Doctor takes off in the Tardis, now in working order as the Doctor has been forgiven by the Time Lords.

Jo pays a visit to Wholeweal, meets Jones and is immediately attracted by him. The Brigadier calls on the local director of Global, Stevens. The Doctor is being chased by peculiar monsters on the planet of Metebelis Three.

Stevens claims that no pollution is going into the mine; the Brigadier is sceptical about this statement.

The Doctor finds his sapphire and, thankful, returns to earth. In response to an urgent summons from the Brigadier he leaves at once for Wales.

Clifford Jones explains to Jo the research he is doing into the potential of fungi as a source of high grade protein. The community are already living on it. He hopes to make a trip down the Amazon to investigate bigger and better mushrooms.

Continued.....

The Brigadier leaves to go down the mine. Stevens tells his strong-arm man, Hinks that no one must be allowed to do this. Then he puts on a strange-looking set of head phones.

Dai Evans, already in the mine, is in trouble. Bert, one of those in charge of the office belonging to the Coal Board, decides to go down. Jo, who is also there, volunteers to go with him - she is trained in first aid. They descend in the lift.

The Doctor and the Brigadier arrive at the pit head, but are too late to stop them. Hinks has already tinkered with the brake, and the machinery is out of control.

EPISODE TWO (Recording No. 84963)

The Doctor and the others on top decide to cut away the cable and rig a donkey engine and pulley system. The only equipment available belongs to the chemical works.

Stevens decides not to loan the equipment, and when his chief scientific officer protests, the man is processed. When the Brigadier arrives Fell states that the equipment was withdrawn some time before. Elgin, the firm's public relations officer, suspects that something peculiar is going on.

In the meantime, down in the mine, Jo and Bert have found Evans who, green in colour, seems to be dying.

The Brigadier decides to try to get the equipment from the nearest town. Clifford Jones and the Doctor, convinced that United Chemicals have it, are working out their own plan of action. While Cliff organises a demonstration to distract the guards' attention, the Doctor makes his way into the complex. He is detected at once, and Stevens asks his master if he should be terminated. The Boss's voice orders the intruder's function and purpose to be ascertained.

The Doctor is cornered and immediately released by Stevens who shows him the empty shed where the cutting equipment was kept.

The Brigadier arrives with the cutting equipment - he managed to find some at a garage nearby. Jo and Bert are trying to find their way out by another exit. They see a luminous rivulet of green slime. Bert touches it, and finds that it burns like acid.

Continued.....

The others have managed to get down, and find Dai - dead. Then they find Bert who is now very weak. Jo has gone ahead. The Doctor follows to find her, but orders that no one else shall come.

Jo finds a pool in a cavern giving off a greenish steam, obviously the source of the liquid. In it are two-foot long maggots. The Doctor arrives, and then some of the liquid pours out, cutting off their retreat.

EPISODE THREE (Recording No. 85251)

Using an old coal truck, and the still-existing rails, Jo and the Doctor manage to get across the pool.

The Brigadier tells Stevens that a full international investigation of the company is needed, and if he considers it necessary to close it down he will. But Stevens has powerful allies, and a Cabinet order tells him to put himself at Stevens' disposal.

Elgin realises that Fell is trying to cut off the Doctor's escape route. He forces the man to tell him how to open the panel, and they manage to get out. Elgin smuggles them away.

An office is placed at the Brigadier's disposal, but he declines the offer of staff. He will bring his own.

Fell goes to pieces, and the Boss orders his destruction, in spite of Stevens' protests. Fell throws himself out of a window.

Bert dies - every cell in his body had been attacked by some sort of unknown virus. The Doctor hopes the egg he brought up from the mine shaft will help him to isolate it. In the meantime Stevens has heard about the egg and sends Hinks to get it.

The egg hatches out, and the maggot makes its way to the room where Jo is sitting alone.

EPISODE FOUR (Recording No. 85252)

Hinks appears and is attacked by the maggot, which then escapes.

Cliff discovers that the slime from the maggots turns human cells into cells like those of the creature itself. The Doctor says that they need another of the creatures for their investigations.

Stevens orders the Brigadier to seal off the mine shaft with explosives.

A gentleman arrives from the Ministry to see Stevens. It is in fact Captain Yates, who has been planted by the Brigadier. The sealing off order has been given by the Minister, and there is nothing they can do about it.

The result of the explosion is to bring the maggots to the surface. Bullets and sprays have no effect upon them. The only answer is a biological counter-stroke, and for this they need some of the oil waste that has been pumped into the mine. Yates is under close observation and cannot help them. However, with the help of a milkman, the Doctor gets what he wants.

Jo accidentally knocks some powdered fungus on a slide smeared with the green slime. She goes outside.

Yates tells the Doctor that Stevens is not the real boss.

Cliff discovers the remedy, and at the same time a note from Jo saying "I'll bring back a maggot for you".

The Doctor meets a giant computer - the Boss.

EPISODE FIVE (Recording No. 85471)

Cliff finds the note and goes to find Jo. He follows her into the maggot zone.

The Doctor in the meantime learns from the Boss that he/it was the first computer to be linked to a human brain - Stevens. The machine programmed the man to programme it to be superlatively inefficient. It is now self-controlling, self sufficient and self renewing, uniquely fitted to carry out the prime directive for which it was first created - productivity and profit for United Chemicals. Nothing and nobody can be allowed to stand in the way.

To Jo's relief, Cliff joins her and then they see that the area is about to be bombed by a helicopter. They take refuge in a small cave where, unseen, a maggot is lurking.

Cliff saves Jo from attack by the maggot, but is knocked unconscious by the bombing. The attack is totally unsuccessful, and Jo sees that the entrance to the cave is barred.

An ineffectual attempt is made to process the Doctor. He is rescued by Yates, but in their escape attempt the latter is trapped. Doctor Who escapes in the milk van.

With the noise from his sonic screwdriver, the Doctor manages to deflect the maggots for long enough to enable Sergeant Benton to rescue Jo and Cliff from the cave. Cliff, unconscious and apparently suffering from concussion, is put to bed. Then Jo notices a green stain on his neck.

The Doctor has two problems; he has to find a cure for Cliff and how to prevent the larvae from following their logical development and turning into insects. Then Yates appears at the door. He has a gun in his hand, and he has been programmed to kill. Using the Metebelis Three sapphire, the Doctor manages to break the power of the conditioning. Yates is then asked to go back into the complex.

EPISODE SIX (Recording No. 85481)

Stevens and the Boss are making the last preparations when Yates appears and announces that the Doctor is dead. However, he gives himself away, but he is left with Elgin. Using the crystal he manages to rid Elgin of the conditioning and learns that at four o'clock.....then Elgin drops dead.

The Doctor is trying to find a cure for the green disease. Then a lucky accident happens. A maggot breaks into the larder, eats some of the fungi, and dies. Fortunately there is a large stock in the stores, and when it is thrown in the maggot area they too eat it and die. But one maggot has turned into a giant insect which attacks the Doctor and Benton, who are in a car. Fortunately they are able to kill it.

Continued.....

Yates manages to escape, and tells the Doctor that whatever is to happen will happen at four o'clock. Leaving the others to make an injection of powdered fungus for Cliff, the Doctor goes to the complex.

The link up with other computers in major cities has begun. Using the sapphire the Doctor begins to break down Stevens' conditioning. The man returns to his own personality and begins cross-feeding the generator circuitry. There is an auto-destruct system built into the machine. The Doctor manages to escape and the whole building explodes in a gigantic fireball.

Cliff is now recovering. He and Jo are to marry and make a trip up the Amazon together.

The Doctor goes off alone into the sunset.

THE DOCTOR (Recording No. 82461)

Given that the time was making me feel very lonely when Yates appeared and announced that the Doctor is dead. However, he gives himself away, but as I said with Elgin, using the crystal he managed to rid him of his conditioning and learns that at four o'clock....then Elgin drops dead.

The Doctor is trying to find a cure for the green disease. There's a black, scaly, reptilian... a maggot breaks into the forest, eats up all the plants, and dies. Fortunately there is a large stockpile of food, and when it is thrown in the maggot dies. They are all dead now. But one maggot has turned into a giant insect which attacks the Doctor and Benton, who are in a net. Fortunately they are able to kill it.
